SUMMARY

The study aimed to assess results of the implementation and propose solutions for implementation of new rural construction planning in Bao Ha commune. Data was collected from departments of commune and from 100 households by random sampling. The implementation of the new rural construction planning was assessed by comparing the results with the proposed planning. Likert's five-level scale was used to assess the local people's satisfaction on the results of implementation of the criteria and results of implementation of the new rural construction planning. The results show that in 2010 Bao Ha commune meet only 2/19 criteria for new rural standards. By 2016, the commune has 9/19 new rural standards. People in Bao Ha commune assessed the performance of the criteria for new rural construction with medium level. Planning for development of agricultural production of goods, industry, cottage industries, services and planning development residential areas were assessed with a high level. Land use planning and socio-economic and environmental infrastructure planning are assessed at an average level. In order to implement effective construction planning, the following solutions should be implemented in a uniform manner: raise people's awareness of new rural construction; diversify the form of capital mobilization; improve the quality of human resources, enhance the application of science and technology to develop production models and improve the infrastructure.
